The second case report was about a 28-year-old male patient with a renal transplant from a matched sibling, who developed severe gastrointestinal manifestations after receiving a heart transplant. Intestinal histology showed a mild grade chronic rejection but no infective agents were identified. These two cases are also being diagnosed and treated at the Department of Gastroenterology, Hospital Universiti Sains Malaysia, Kelantan, Malaysia, and this report is the third of three cases in the same series. The third case was an 18-year-old female patient with leprosy, who developed erythrodermic reactions after heart and renal transplantation. All the necessary controls were used to avoid the risk of bias. A real strength of this study is the inclusion of numerous cases and controls, which make this study very clinically relevant. The reports from the 3 patient cohorts are very interesting in the context of the authors hypothesis.
